ASSISTANT SECRETARY of State William P. Bundy said yesterday that the U.S. "must continue" in South Viet-Nam.

"There is no doubt of our determination to see this situation through," Bundy told an overflow audience at a Woman's National Democratic Club luncheon.

The peoples and nations of Southeast Asia have a right to determine their own fate, he said. "Yet we have a crucial role to play toward their political, economic and social progress."

The independent countries in Southeast Asia have made far greater economic strides than the Communist Chinese, he said.

He compared U.S. policy in Southeast Asia to U.S. policy in Europe after World War II, and said that the aim is to help independent countries survive the Communist onslaughts and infiltration.

Bundy said he sees no real threat in the recent nuclear bomb explosion in Communist China. "Its nuclear strength is not likely to be of any significant size for many years to come."

He said that the U.S. still stands firm against the admission of Communist China into the United Nations.

In the audience were his wife, the former Mary Acheson, and her mother, Mrs. Dean Acheson, wife of the former Secretary of State.

Morse on Disaster

NEW YORK—Sen. Wayne

Morse (D-Ore.) told the Cooper Union Forum last night that if the United States expands the South Viet-Nam war into North Viet-Nam or Red China it will be inviting disaster and "flouting every principle of international policy we have espoused since World War II."

Morse charged that U.S. policy in South Viet-Nam "is a shambles" facing complete collapse of the current government there.
